Be Glad and Rejoice!

The poet Isaiah declares the goodness of God in terms that desert people understand, of the goodness of spring, the grace of a loving God, and the mercy and justice of a messiah. Still, the psalmist continues to implore God, telling of God's goodness, and along with exhortations in the second reading, and even Jesus himself. Every Advent, we would read such readings. Why?

The psalmist has a tendency to remind listeners (and readers), as well as God, of God's unfailing love and mercy. I might not know how that affects God, but as for us, perhaps there is merit in repetition, though not so much about helping us to remember, but to convince ourselves, and condition ourselves in a particular way to receive God. It's like the pep-talk in the changing room before the second half of the game. It's similar to mob mentality or hysteria reinforced among members of a group and takes over each individual's thoughts and actions. It's contagious, convincing and works on the most difficult part to change of a human being – their ideas and mindsets.

I arrived at this notion after noticing how present-day Jews chant and pray their prayers, psalms, or intoned poems. The morning prayer I attended personally was very bewildering and fast. So much so it suggests to me that it is not the conscious part – the meaning of the text – that facilitates the change in the Jews. Rather than just an exercise of prayer, the chant, along with body movements, conveys, as external signs and symbols, very deeply an internal meaning and accompanying change of attitude or feeling. It is prayer in action leading to a changed heart. It is by being glad and rejoicing that the heart is prepared to receive God. It's like praise and worship that moves one to be open to God.

So, repetitions of readings is not to help us memorize, but for us to extemporize what is contained by those readings, to be taken up and express spontaneously what it means, rather than dwell or meditate on the meaning of the words per se. Unlike speaking in tongues, the text is very relevant, but the meaning or objective of the text is ultimately a conversion of the heart. The text ensures that the believer is confessing their faith, and keeping in mind that Jesus is the Word of God. But, can the Word of God convert us, be a real and immediate bridge to a life with God?

In our everyday life, we can observe the relatively benign influence of other "triggers" on our selves. Such as when we hear certain music or sounds like the lion dance, dominant emotions and memories associated with Chinese New Year surface. Or when we hear "Happy Birthday" being sung, related feelings and memories surface before being drowned out by other current pieces of conscious information, such as

SACRAMENT OF
CONFESSION,
WHERE YOU
WILL MEET
JESUS WHO FORGIVES YOU.

today's date. Other triggers might be the word "Sales" or "Buy 1, 1 Free" – the list is extensive and perhaps unexamined. With respect to the Word of God, it might just be that we don't have enough embedded memories and feelings in order to trigger some effect in us.

If that's the case, if we find today's readings deficient in rousing our spirits, perhaps we need to celebrate as intended, dress up, take that extra step, make that extra loud response together, in order to identify and savour the experiences to link to and be engaged by these readings. Taking a leaf out of today's readings, we should really try to celebrate, implore God, be good Christians expressing the joy of the Gospel, and bring the Good News to others. For the Word is really very, very good, and we should prepare as best we can, by living and creating memories around the Word in the present and for the future.

Praying for Peace with Mary and Elizabeth

Most of the time, if we turn to God and beg for peace, it is difficult to know how to pray it. It can seem “futile”. Can God really change the hearts of enough people to give peace a chance?

Part of our Advent longing will be to grow in our desire for peace - a hunger and thirst for it. For at midnight Liturgy on Christmas eve, we hear the angels say to the shepherds: “Do not be afraid; for behold, I proclaim to you good news of great joy that will be for all the people.”

Let’s let a desire for the Good News of Christmas grow in our hearts each day now. Let’s feel the pain of “hostility”, and fear and anxiety of all those who are in the middle of the terror of war - civilians, soldiers, and all of us. And as we feel this tremendous longing and hope, let’s turn to God and ask for peace in our own hearts. In these precious days of preparation, we can all be peace-makers at home, with our friends and relatives, in our parishes and faith communities, and where we work.

As we make our own efforts at peace around us, let’s turn to two Advent guides, Elizabeth and Mary.

Elizabeth suffered doubly. She was growing old and people judged her. People would have assumed that her “curse” of being childless was punishment from God. Yet Elizabeth bore her suffering with faith. She had trust that God loved her and that, if it was God’s desire, her marriage with Zachary would be fruitful with a child. Her life and her marriage were fruitful with hope. How she must have prayed for her husband’s faith and consolation. She knew his pain. He would have no son to continue his priestly work. When God’s message came to Zachary, inspiring him to hope that he would have a son, he was unable to speak, to say the child’s name, because part of him still could not believe God could be that faithful. When he saw his child, Zachary’s mouth could finally proclaim, what Elizabeth had longed for him to know: “His name is John.” In Hebrew, “John” means, “God is a gracious giver”. Could they ever imagine the child their trust in God gave birth to? How could they have dreamed of how John would prepare the way for a peace the world could not give?

What is that place in my life that is like a barren desert? What seems dry and incapable of growth and life? Where am I guilty of the critical eye that presumes to judge the soul of another? Where can I grow in trust of God’s desires for me - to place my life in God’s hands? How can my heart and my mouth proclaim that God is faithfully gracious? How can I place my trust in - dream of - the barely imaginable?

Mary was innocent in every way. Yet, her very fidelity to God would cost her the understanding of others. They could never understand her pregnancy. How could she tell them that “the holy Spirit of God has overshadowed me”? But, Joseph knew. And, together, they formed a community of incredible faith in God’s way. They would be at God’s service - suffering, as all servants do. Mary’s trust in God was so deep that she gave birth to the Prince of Peace. The intimacy between this mother and her child was so profound, that the lance that pierced his heart on the Cross, would pass through her heart first. This humble mother trusted that nothing would be impossible with God. Mary hurried to visit Elizabeth, to help and support her, but also to be strengthened herself with Elizabeth’s faith. Oh, how we need each other to be in service of Jesus’ mission!

In what places in my life do I ask, “How can this be”? There are impossible barriers to peace. How do I say that I just can’t see how it is possible to believe in the power of God - here in my heart, in my home, among my family and friends, at work, among these peoples? How am I being invited to respond, “May it be done to me according to your word”? How can I be faithful to being in God’s service - and not be so worried about what people think of me? And in my growing desire to be more intimate with Jesus in my everyday life, in what concrete ways, with what particular persons, can I let the pattern of his life transform my life? How can I hurry to support others, while finding the community of faith I need to be faithful servant in Jesus’ own mission?

Let us all continue to pray for peace in our world. Let’s pray that hearts might be transformed, to find the path of peace together. But, as we pray, let’s let peace have a chance in our own hearts, in our own world, close at home. The peace-making begins with God’s work in us. This is truly Advent longing.

Let there be peace on earth, and let it begin with me!
